

Express

Wireframe

This layout is categorized by the moods that I have recorded during the writing process.

Since this project is writing based, I have chosen to express the moods more creatively using idioms/figures of speech. These are the meanings of each:

- as a clam = happy
- up in arms = angry
- got the blues = sad
- running on empty = tired
- fever pitch = excited
- watching paint dry = bored
- footloose = relaxed

Homepage

The writing is categorized by moods. The size of the circle will depend on the number of entries that are designated under that mood. I might come up with a formula to decide this or draw the circles based on estimates.

Mood page

Clicking on one of the circles will take the user to this page consisting of all the entries that fall under that mood. The background color is the same as the circle on the home page. The name of the mood is on the bottom corner of the page.

Entries are in chronological order. Hover state shows lighting up.

Name of mood is fixed in position when scrolling.

about

Express

moods

First sentence of entry 1...

First sentence of entry 2...

First sentence of entry 3...

First sentence of entry 4...

First sentence of entry 5...

First sentence of entry 6...

First sentence of entry 7...

First sentence of entry 8...

First sentence of entry 9...

First sentence of entry 10...

as a clam

Entry page

This is a sample of what an entry page might look like using one of the writings that I've already done that falls into this category.

Navigation arrows to move between entries under the same mood.

Clicking on the name of the mood will take the user back to the mood page.

about

Express

moods

A voice outside. No getting caught.
A long drag calms me down and the clicking sound of my lighter.
It's quiet outside. I can feel the breeze on my face. The moon is big and shiny like a tin foil plate. I might be hungry. Or bored? It's been a good day. Maa will call soon.

as a clam